"The Avengers" Don't Look Behind You (TV Episode 1963) - IMDb

The rule is pretty simple: if you are on an out-and-back hike (versus a point-to-point or loop hike) don't look behind you. My theory is that if you intentionally miss 50 percent of the hike out by not looking behind you, then everything in front of you on the way back is "fresh" and the return hike is practically a new experience.
